

---

What is a Client Server Model?

Select one:

- a. A computer that requests for a task
- b. A distributed application structure where roles or functions are separated into service providers and service requesters

A type of cloud used solely by a single organization

Select one:

- a. Private cloud
- b. Cloud

What is a Server?

Select one:

- a. A computer that requests for a task
- b. A computer that performs a task for other computers in a network.

What is a Service?

Select one:

- a. A computer that requests for a task
- b. A computer that performs a task for other computers in a network.
- c. A distributed application structure where roles or functions are separated into service providers and service requesters
- d. The task that is performed in the client-server model

It has to do with network diagrams where groups of servers and other remote assets are usually represented by a drawing of a cloud

Select one:

- a. Origin
- b. Utility computing

What is Cloud Computing?

Select one:

- a. Both a single technology and counting clouds in the sky

- b. The practice of storing, accessing, and processing data in remote locations through the Internet

It is the practice of creating a virtual or software version of a device and resource

Select one:

- a. Virtualization
- b. Cloud computing

It is one of the defining characteristics of Cloud Computing

Select one:

- a. None of these
- b. Utility computing

What is a Cloud?

Select one:

- a. Literally the clouds in the sky
- b. Any of these
- c. It refers to the network of computers that contain the computing resources that are made available to the users
- d. It refers to the network of servers that contain the computing resources that are made available to the users

What is a Client?

Select one:

- a. A computer that performs a task for other computers in a network
- b. The task that is performed in the client-server model
- c. A distributed application structure where roles or functions are separated into service providers and service requesters
- d. A computer that requests for a task